

MSU-Mankato Students Show Off Their Computer Game Creations

May 2nd, 5:51 PM

After working on a class project for an entire semester, students in MSU–Mankato's I.T.-496 class got to show off their computer game creations.

The class had to display their games to the public today in MSU's Centennial Student Union as the last phase of their game development course.

Along with their original game creations, students also had to create their own art and music to go with them.

Students say it was a difficult, but fun project.

Junior, MSU-Mankato student, John Engelhart says, "It was an awesome experience. Honestly I'd love to take it again and be able to make another program."

The instructor of the course hopes his students will get licenses to make their games available to the public.

SOURCE: <http://www.keyc.com/story/25417348/msu-mankato-students-show-off-their-computer-game-creations>